0. Short overview of the 'Violence Prevention Network'-approach not yet translated	-
1. Introductory comments – Causal factors of the first and second orders, taking the example of the factor of "trust formation"	1
2. The impact factor of "strengthening the emotional memory"	5
2.1 'Samet' 1: The ability to remember as emphatic experience – and factor of group work. (On the "personal stop-card" method)	8
2.2 'Samet' 2: Memory formation – individual contemplation and/or interactive remembering in the group	13
2.3 Biographical excursus on Samet	17
2.4 Connections to empirical violence research 1	19
2.5 'Mussa': The deepening of emotional memory-formation and emotional learning, particularly concerning affects of shame, embarrassment and uncertainty. (The methodological element of role- play reconstructions of highly-charged scenes)	21
2.6 Conceptual comments on the terms "method tool" and "impact factor" – with regard to the transferability and applicability of the VPN method for other users	26
3.1 'Baran' 1: Initial observations regarding ambivalence and dealing with ambivalence	30
3.2 ,Baran • 2: Memory formation and "emotional memory" under conditions of Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHS)	32
3.3 Connections to empirical violence research 2	36
	40

3.4 ,Baran' 3: Perspective on the impact factor of "open-narrative story telling"
3.5 Biographical excursus: Baran – civil war, asylum seeking, dysfunctional families	49
4. What is sustainable civic education and how should we deliver it? Ambivalence about the subjectively alien and "making friends through violence" – in the light of some findings from psychodynamics and psychiatry	53
4.1 "Civic-personal education" – the lifeworld-narrative aspects of the political	62
4.2 The methodological tool of the educational exercises	64
4.3 Educational exercises 1: Key situations of powerlessness and creative problem-solving – exercise, reflection and memory formation	66
4.4 Exercises 2: Experiences of non-verbal interaction and their reflexive linguistic articulation	68
4.5 Exercises 3: Physical tension, self-perception and biodynamic relaxation	70
4.6 The attitude of the coaches – the 'supportive-critical' attitude ('Heissam')	74
4.7 Interim conclusion on the factor of "emotional memory"	81
5. Integrated reappraisal of both biography and crime and the use of staging exercises and so-called confrontational elements	83
5.1 Richard the "bottler" – family dynamic and the boundless anger of manslaughter	83
5.2 Ferdinand Sutterlüty's qualitative-empirical study of "careers of violence" and the significance of experiences of systematic familial humiliation	78

5.3 Max 1: Fatherlessness and the delegations of a maternal victim- disposition: more on the significance of family-therapeutic aspects	90
5.4 Max 2: An exercise in a 'constellation-exercise' his current personal situation	92
6.1 What is the significance of the "processual character", "openness" and "dynamism" of the VPN approach	96
6.2 Why openness of the process and development of trust?	102
6.3 Initial conclusions about processual character and group work	107
6.4 General prerequisites for processual work in groups, part 1: the personal competences of the coaches	108
6.5 General prerequisites, part 2: the institutional framework for group work	110
6.6 Case analysis of a difficult group process and its institutional contextual dynamics	112
6.7 Reiteration: the importance of the institutional independence of coaches	124
6.8 Open process group-dynamic work is effective – in any case	127
7. Interconnecting the processual group work with the institutional framework of the prison	130
7.1 Interconnections with co-prisoners	130
7.2 Procedures of peer-to-peer work and self-qualification as opportunity for a future federal model project	133
7.3 Interconnections with the prison and prison employees	135
	139

7.4 The factor of "open-narrative recounting" – and the effectiveness of lifeworld-based work
8. Typical difficulties in the transfer of the VPN approach to other fields of work and socio-cultural areas (not yet translated)	144
8.1 Lines of conflict and 'Inter-agency'-dynamics between classical cognitive civic educational teaching and open-process, narrative group work (not yet translated)	-
8.2 The sensitive issue of getting in personal contact with vulnerable persons and perpetrators – Aspects of the setting of deradicalisation work (not yet translated)	-
8.3 ,Tommi' 1: Case history of a problematic situation in a project of deradicalisation work – and its conflict causing impact on the team (not yet translated)	-
8.4 Institutional conditions of rivalry, internal division and possessiveness with regard to the target group – the necessity of quality management and professionalizing in deradicalisation (not yet translated)
8.5 ,Tommi' 2: The systemic group-dynamic processes in the team (not yet translated)	-
8.6 A pedagogic blunder – under the veil of 'correct' civic education (not yet translated)	-
8.7 A case of 'mirroring' of the target group's extremism into the team – the necessity of professional consultancy and formative evaluation (not yet translated)	-
8.8 How the team dynamic went on – conflicts and irrationalities within liberal civil society (not yet translated)	-
8.9 Acting out the internal conflicts vis-a-vis the participants – worst case of a typical 'inter-agency'-conflict (not yet translated)	-

<ul> <li>8.10 The pitfalls of civic education and deradicalisation work: The personal ability of empathy/ shift of perspective – understood psychologically and/or pedagogically? And danger of an anti-psychological attitude in social work (not yet translated)</li> </ul>
8.11 The benefits and limits of case and team supervision (not yet translated)
9. Links with societal and academic discourses in the national and international field of prevention of (rightwing) extremism and hate crime	145
9.1 The most recent evaluation of the Federal Government's model projects – direct "conflict management" and the factors of "life-world" and "socio-emotional development"	145
9.2 Cognitive versus emotional learning – still an unsolved issue in pedagogical practice	147
9.3 The Violence Prevention Network in the light of the findings of the final report	150
9.4 Special challenges through societal, medial and party-political discourses	152
9.4 .1 The pitfalls of behaviourist 'anti-aggression training' – the "hot seat" method	155
9.4.2 The pitfalls of de-contextualized family constellations (Bernd Hellinger)	156
9.5 Supplement to the Federal Programmes: The German government's current political-educational agenda – and the contrast with European strategies for prevention of extremism and hate crime	158
9.5.1 Counterproductive reassignment of funds	158
9.5.2 A contrasting approach: research-based and forward looking EU strategies	160

9.5.3 Party-politically motivated behaviour of German government institutions	163
9.6 "Accepting" or "confrontational" approaches and what does this mean anyhow? Specialist discourse with little empirical basis and its implications for innovative methodological development	167
9.7 Implications for the work of VPN – establishing an open but non- "fraternising" rapport	172
10. Empirical data and results as an answer to unduly narrow party-political and academic approaches: Köttig's biographical research on the life history, ideology and/or psychology of a young, violence-prone woman from the far- right scene ('Jacky')	176
10.1 'Jacky' 1: Three-generationally transmitted family patterns of violent and abusive relationships	177
10.2 ,Jacky' 2: The unconscious acting-out of biographical issues in the extremist peer-group	179
10.3 'Jacky' 3: yy Dissociated memories and unconscious projections	180 onto a foe image – and the resolving potential of narrative work
10.4 yy 'Jacky' 4: Projecting fantasy history and family fantasy histories out of personal dilemmas – and the limits of confrontational intervention	182
10.5 yy The shortfall of informational, educational or behaviouristic training approaches – in the face of the psycho-biographical complexities of extremists	183
10.6 yy Acknowledging the importance of long-term psychodynamic processes of personal development	186
11. The biographical research of the Federal Criminal Police Office (BKA) on violent extremists and terrorists from different ideological backgrounds (2010) (not yet translated)	189
